From the Editors

It is a tradition of the Polish Economic Society to publish an English-language issue of our Bulletin every few years. These issues usually coincide with significant events in the life of the Society, as is the case now, following the 11th Congress of Polish Economists, held in 2025 in Poznań.

This Bulletin consists of three parts. In the first, we share key information about the Society's activities and convey our enthusiasm for the work we do every day. Topics covered include the Economic Knowledge Contest, conferences and seminars, our book publications, and international cooperation.

The second part of the Bulletin is devoted entirely to the 11th Congress of Polish Economists. We present a report on the event that goes beyond mere statistics, highlighting the substantive aspects of the proceedings. We explain the reasons for organizing the Congress and present the Poznań Declaration, adopted by acclamation by the attendees. The Declaration reflects the collective position of the Congress participants and sets out recommendations for public debate on the future direction of Poland's socio-economic development.

The third part of the Bulletin puts the provisions of the Declaration into practice, opening with a text on the need to develop a new model of socio-economic development for Poland. This contribution stems from our conviction that the engines of growth that have driven us thus far are gradually running out of steam. At the same time, this debate reflects our belief that, amid polarized public discourse, there is a need for a calm and substantive discussion about Poland's future. Accordingly, in the third section of the Bulletin, we present the views of a wide range of economists on a new development model. We would like to thank all of them for sharing their perspectives. We believe that, in doing so, we are fulfilling the Society's mission: serving as a bridge between economic science and economic practice, between academic reflection and public debate, and between national traditions and international cooperation.

We hope you enjoy this issue.
